King Hussein: Oil is the most effective weapon the Arabs have

JERUSALEM, Feb. 17 (Agencies) — King Hussein today said Arab countries to use oil more efficiently as a weapon in the Middle East conflict. In an interview in the Lebanese weekly "Al Hawad" published here, the King said Arab countries would "fail" if they were "incapable of using oil as a weapon."

Sadat hails Carter as a "great statesman," again calls for link between Jordan, Palestinians

CAIRO, Feb. 17 (R). — President Anwar Sadat tonight hailed the decision announced today by the United States not to supply Israel with highly-destructive concussion bombs as an act of "great statesmanship."

Appearing at a press conference with visiting U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, Mr. Sadat expressed Egypt's deep gratitude both for American economic assistance and for President Carter's decision not to sell the concussion bomb to Israel.

The Egyptian leader said the decision was "a very positive step and showed great statesmanship from the side of President Carter."

During the news conference, Mr. Sadat also announced he would visit the United States in early April and urged Jordan and the Palestinians to establish "an official link" even before the resumption of the Geneva peace conference later this year.

President Sadat has previously advocated a link between Jordan and a new Palestinian state which might be set up on Israeli-occupied territory on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Mr. Vance, who arrived in Cairo earlier today from Israel, told reporters he hoped the Geneva talks could be resumed in the second half of this year.

The U.S. secretary of state added that he was not proposing that the step-by-step process towards peace in the Middle East be resumed, and Mr. Sadat commented that those days were now over and the time had come for a global solution.

The two appeared at the press conference after about two hours of talks at Mr. Sadat's rest house north of here.

President Sadat's proposal for a Jordanian-Palestinian confederation was believed aimed at meeting Israel's objection to a separate delegation representing the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) at Geneva.

Such a confederation might also go at least some way in meeting Israeli fears that an independent Palestinian state on its border would pose grave security problems.

Asked whether Egypt had urged the PLO to accept the existence of the state of Israel, Mr. Sadat said only that PLO leader Yasser Arafat had met Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy here earlier today "and they discussed this."

He refused to elaborate but said it was up to the Palestinian people to decide on their goals.

President Sadat was asked the future status of U.S. military bases in Greece.

He said there had been no decision yet on supplying Israel with the "Flir" night-time electronic detection system using heat sensors.

Mr. Powell stressed that President Carter retained the right to go back on any arms supplies promises made by his predecessor.

The Israeli Ambassador to Washington, Mr. Simcha Dinitz, said in a television interview screened in Tel Aviv tonight that Israel may ask the United States to supply an alternative weapon capable of doing the same job as the concussion bomb which President Carter has refused to sell overseas.

"It is the first time that an American president has upset a commitment undertaken by his predecessor," another Israeli said -- a decision criticized in Israel as unprecedented and incomprehensible.

In his television interview, Ambassador Dinitz said: "I believe we are now going to enter intensive negotiations with the Americans about a possible substitute for the bombs, a weapon which might serve the same purpose but is not taboo to the United States."

De Guiringaud to meet PLO's Kaddoumi after Beirut visit

JERUSALEM, Feb. 17 (Agencies) — French Foreign Minister Louis de Guiringaud said tonight he expected to meet a leading official of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), Fatah Kaddoumi, in Damascus tomorrow.

FRENCH-LEBANESE TALKS -- French Foreign Minister Louis de Guiringaud (left) talks with his Lebanese counterpart Fuad Butros at Beirut International airport Wednesday. De Guiringaud is on a two-day visit to Lebanon. (AP wirephoto).

De Guiringaud made the announcement at a press conference in Beirut, the first stop of a four-nation Middle East tour aimed at establishing what France can play in help settle the protracted Middle East conflict.

Mr. Kaddoumi is head of the PLO's Political Department and actively the Foreign Minister of the organisation.

The French foreign minister did not say what he expected to discuss with the PLO leader.

Mr. de Guiringaud will also talk tomorrow in Damascus with President of the Palestinian National Council Khalil Al Fehoum, an authoritative French source said here today.

Mr. de Guiringaud's Middle East tour is part of intensive diplomatic efforts to bring about a settlement of the conflict between the Arabs and Israel.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance is expected here tomorrow on a brief visit.

He asked whether the visits had been coordinated by the French American governments, Mr. de Guiringaud said there had been no coordination and there was "certainly no competition."

Mr. de Guiringaud, who earlier led the battle-scarred capital of 1977 must be the "when Middle East peace sought, for the circumstances have never been so favourable."

It was in this quest for peace, he said that he would be visiting Damascus, Amman, Cairo and Israel.

Winding up his visit here today, he warned that France was going through an austerity period when aid to foreign countries was difficult to find.

However, he said: "I have asked Raymond Barre, the Prime Minister, for special credit to pay for missions of experts requested by Lebanon."

Mr. de Guiringaud said his talks today with Lebanese President Elias Sarkis and Prime Minister Selim Al Hoss had left him relatively optimistic on the prospects for peace in the Middle East.

He predicted that Lebanon would regain its former role as the financial centre of the Middle East if security continued and the reconciliation between rival groups made progress.

M. de Guiringaud said that President Sarkis had accepted an invitation from French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing to visit France. The date is yet to be fixed.

Knesset body votes Gaza Strip part of Israel

AMMAN (JNA). — The Jerusalem Arabic daily newspaper Al Quds, quoted Thursday by the official Jordanian News Agency, said that the Knesset had adopted by a majority of 11 votes a proposal considering the Gaza Strip an integral part of Israel.

The proposal, put forward by Likud leader Menachem Begin, is expected to be passed by the Knesset when submitted for approval, the paper said.

In another development cited by Al Quds, the Gush Emunim movement has asked that U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance be informed that Israel will not abandon the West Bank. The movement had threatened to raise the question in its own way if its demand was not met, Al Quds stated.

FIGHTING IN SOUTH LEBANON REPORTED

BEIRUT, Feb. 17 (AFP). — South Lebanon exploded today with fresh exchanges of artillery and automatic fire, reports reaching here said.

The reports said the exchanges were taking place in the area of Qle'a and Marjeyoun opposite the Israeli frontier town of Metoulla.

Young: Violence is no solution for S. Africa

UNITED NATIONS, New York, Feb. 17 (AFP). — American Ambassador to the U.N. Andrew Young today rejected the idea of material support by the United States to armed liberation movements but gave full backing to diplomatic efforts to achieve a settlement in Southern Africa.

At his first press conference since being named to the U.N. post, Mr. Young said the U.S. had no desire to take over the process of negotiations in Rhodesia but would support British efforts there. Britain believed the solution must be an African one, he said, and the U.S. would do its best to promote that goal.

"The diplomatic power of the liberation movements is far superior to their military strength," he noted. "Armed struggle inevitably tends to be destructive. The less you destroy, the better everybody is."

Mr. Young added that "internal solutions in Zimbabwe (Rhodesia) and Namibia (Southwest Africa) are not acceptable and only internationally acceptable solutions will be recognised."

Arafat will not meet Cyrus Vance

CAIRO, Feb. 17 (AFP). — Palestine Liberation Organisation leader Yasser Arafat today denied reports that he would meet U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance during the latter's current tour of the Middle East.

Before leaving Cairo for Riyadh, Mr. Arafat said it was up to the United States to put pressure on Israel to achieve a Middle East settlement, "especially since Israel is currently in an economic crisis and counts entirely on American support."

Mr. Arafat said he had made two visits to Cairo in 48 hours to coordinate Egyptian and Palestinian efforts on the Palestinian issue, as well as on general Arab and international matters.

He announced that a delegation headed by Mr. Khaled Fahoum, President of the Palestinian National Council, would go to Amman this week for talks on Jordanian-Palestinian relations.

Carter envoy begins Cyprus mission

ATHENS, Feb. 17 (R). — President Carter's special envoy Clark Clifford arrived here today hoping to maintain the new diplomatic momentum over the Cyprus problem.

The former American defence secretary is on a fact-finding mission to Athens, Ankara and Nicosia to determine the role the United States can play in solving the dispute.

He specified earlier that the role will be one of assistance to United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim. "The negotiations will be his primary responsibility," he told reporters in Vienna.

Mr. Clifford conferred in the Austrian capital with Dr. Waldheim, whose talks in Cyprus last Saturday ended in agreement by Greek and Turkish-Cypriot leaders to resume next month their deadlocked talks on the future of the island.

Cyprus will top the agenda when Mr. Clifford begins talks tomorrow with Greek Premier Constantine Karamanlis and other leaders. Other topics are expected to include the Greek-Turkish dispute over territorial rights in the Aegean Sea and

White House announces Sale of concussion bomb to Israel is called off

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17 (AFP). — The White House announced today that the United States had decided against supplying Israel with the controversial CBU-72 concussion bombs promised by President Gerald Ford in the last weeks of his presidency.

The decision had been generally expected here and in Israel after President Jimmy Carter expressed his reluctance to furnish the highly destructive weapons to any foreign country.

White House spokesman Jody Powell said no country would be allowed to purchase the concussion bombs, and it was not even certain they would be mass-produced for the U.S. army.

The bomb, which is dropped by parachute from a plane, releases a volatile fuel into the air which catches fire. The combination of fire and blast destroys all vegetation and buildings within its radius of action.

Mr. Ford agreed to supply Israel with the weapons in the midst of the presidential election campaign, despite recommendations to the contrary from the State Department and the Pentagon.

Mr. Carter's decision to refuse delivery was made early this week, but the announcement was postponed to allow U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, currently on a Middle East tour, to inform the Israelis.

Tanks and howitzers promised to Israel by the preceding administration would, however, be sold, Mr. Powell said, subject to congressional approval which was not expected to cause any difficulties.

He said there had been no decision yet on supplying Israel with the "Flir" night-time electronic detection system using heat sensors. The problem was "under active consideration," he told newsmen.

Mr. Powell stressed that President Carter retained the right to go back on any arms supplies promises made by his predecessor.

The Israeli Ambassador to Washington, Mr. Simcha Dinitz, said in a television interview screened in Tel Aviv tonight that Israel may ask the United States to supply an alternative weapon capable of doing the same job as the concussion bomb which President Carter has refused to sell overseas.

"It is the first time that an American president has upset a commitment undertaken by his predecessor," another Israeli said -- a decision criticized in Israel as unprecedented and incomprehensible.

Death of archbishop, 2 ministers in Uganda brings charges of assassination against Idi Amin

ADDIS ABABA, Feb. 17 (R). — The Ugandan government said today that the Anglican archbishop of Uganda and two cabinet ministers were killed in a crash after being arrested on charges of complicity in a plot to overthrow President Idi Amin.

The announcement over Uganda radio about 16 hours after three men died drew reactions of shock and angry disbelief from outside the country -- including charges that they were murdered.

Ugandan announcement: Archbishop Jannai Lun, Interior Minister Archbishop Obo-Otumbi and Minister Erenayo Wilson were trying to overthrow their driver and escape. They were arrested after soldiers at a rally chanted "Kill him, kill them" on hearing statements implicating the archbishop and others in the plot.

The United Nations, Mr. Young said, "strongly condemned what it called the 'killing' in Uganda of the Anglican archbishop and the two government ministers under arrest for 'alleged involvement in a supposed plot against President Idi Amin.'"

The council called for an international investigation into the "killing."

It also requested the United Nations Human Rights Commission to probe rights violations in Uganda and appealed to African nations "to take actions against further loss of life in Uganda."

In London, Dr. Donald Coggan, Archbishop of Canterbury and primate of the Anglican Church, expressed deep shock and horror at the death of Archbishop Luwum, whom he described as a "my dear friend."

Dr. Coggan also voiced his solidarity with African church leaders who have challenged the Amin government.

A British member of parliament, Mr. Greville Janner, told reporters: "This looks like another cover up for a disgraceful and bloody murder."

In Nairobi, the general secretary of the All African Conference of Churches, Canon Burgess Carr, said he regarded the death of Archbishop Luwum as "murder by the Ugandan government security forces."

An open letter to U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance The mistakes have not yet ended

It's a bit hard for us to keep a straight face when we hear you repeat that you are here in the Middle East this week on a "fact-finding" mission. Are we to assume that the United States does not have the facts about everybody's position on a peaceful Middle East settlement? We appreciate the delicate position you are in, and thus we play along with the theatrics that are part of your difficult job. If you say you're here to listen, here are a few thoughts you may wish to discuss with President Carter when you return home.

It is an exercise in futility and childish stubbornness for you to refuse to talk to the PLO in the manner that you have so refused, just as it was a costly exercise in similarly childish futility for your country to have believed at one point that it could win the Vietnam war by bombing that country to smithereens. The American position about refusing to talk to the PLO until the PLO recognises Israel is a dangerous one for your country to maintain if you really wish to be a peace broker in the Middle East. The fact is that your nation is uniquely qualified to help bring peace to the Middle East, and peace can be had if you have the courage to look at the depth of the Palestinian-Zionist conflict, and the wisdom to help reconcile the certainly reconcilable differences between Palestinians and Israelis. In your statements about the PLO, you are only repeating what the Israelis want you to repeat. The process is a national humiliation for your country, and a serious constraint upon your ability to play a positive role in the Middle East search for peace. Are you really trying to mediate honestly between Arabs and Israelis, or are you just being coerced into adopting Israel's fears in your own nation's Middle East policy? You might ponder this during your long flight back to Washington next week.

The choice before the United States is whether or not it has the will to act decisively for peace, which means, above all, convincing the Israelis that they can have their peace if they allow peace to the Palestinians.

You must overcome Israeli fears, not adopt them. You must triumph over the national wounds of history, not open them.

You must act to initiate a dialogue between Israelis and Palestinians, not to put it off.

During your Senate confirmation hearing recently, you said bravely that the United States had made a mistake in Vietnam. We look forward to the day when you will tell the Senate that the United States has made mistakes in the Middle East, and pray for all of us that you shall not return home after this trip only to repeat the mistakes of the past.

Ethiopian events have more than local weight

By Geoffrey Godsell

The Christian Science Monitor News Service

ADDIS ABABA. — The latest upheaval in Ethiopia was more of a palace revolution than a coup. But is a sharp reminder that:

1. Ethiopia itself is under the greatest threat of breakup and of returning to its 19th-century chaos than at any time since the late Emperor Haile Selassie established the central authority of the Amhara people throughout his empire.
2. Once any such breakup began, Ethiopia's neighbours might seek to change the map of Africa to their advantage. In the process, the Soviet Union could get an even bigger foothold in the strategically-placed Horn of Africa. (Moscow already has the use of military facilities in Somalia.)

The military junta, or Dergue, running Ethiopia is still basically the same group of men who ousted Emperor Haile Selassie in 1974 — with the exception of those killed off in struggles within the group since then.

On Feb. 3, the nominal head of state, Gen. Teferi Benti, and six of his colleagues were killed in a shoot-out at Dergue headquarters. In the early days of the Dergue, in November, 1974, Gen. Benti's predecessor as head of state, Gen. Aman Andom, was killed on orders of other members of the junta.

Last week's killings leave Lieut. Col. Meogistu Haile-Mariam as top man. He had long been considered the most powerful and ambitious man in the Dergue. It is possible that an attempt by fellow officers (including Gen. Benti) some weeks ago to clip his wings lies behind what happened. Col. Meogistu may be top man now, but the Dergue as a whole remains in deeper trouble than at any time since it ousted the emperor. It has on its hands:

— Local disaffection in and around the capital, organised or fed by urban and intellectual Marxists in the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party. The latter is blamed for a number of assassinations or assassination attempts in the capital, Addis Ababa.

— A worsening of the situation in Eritrea, where a well-armed and determined separatist movement has long been fighting to take the province out of Ethiopia and establish it as an independent state.

— Military challenges in the provinces of Tigré and Bagemder, which lie between the Sudanese border and Eritrea. In Tigré, the revolt is led by the Marxist-influenced Tigre Popular Liberation Front and Bagemder by the Ethiopian Democratic Union (whose supporters include traditionalists and Ethiopian politicians in exile).

— Renewed hostility from the Sudanese government of President Jaafar Nimetri, with whom the Dergue has been trading protests and threats in recent weeks. The Dergue is outraged at Gen. Nimetri's resumed support of the Eritrean separatist guerrillas.

Gen. Nimetri counter-charges that Ethiopia not only once supported separatists in Sudan's southern provinces but is currently helping former Sudanese Prime Minister Sadiq Al Mahdi in the latter's attempts from outside to bring Gen. Nimetri down. (Earlier this month, there was an unsuccessful coup attempt in Juba in the southern Sudan.)

— Continuing hostility from the government of Somalia, long suspected of waiting for an opportunity to absorb the So-mal-populated Ethiopian province of Ogadeo and the mainly Somali-populated French Territory of Afars and Issas.

The latter is due to become independent later this year — and Ethiopia and Somalia both covet it. The territory's capital and port, Djibouti, is Addis Ababa's only rail outlet to the sea.

If Djibouti came under the control of Somalia, already a client of the Soviet Union, Moscow would gain a wider strategic advantage at the narrow straits controlling the entrance to the Red Sea. These narrow straits are the southern approach both to the Suez Canal.

Simultaneously, Moscow would get a much bigger area of friendly real estate in the Horn of Africa, the promontory into the Indian Ocean astride super-tanker routes between the oil-rich Gulf and the petroleum markets of Western Europe and North America.

Carter's arms policy is to block nuclear accords between other countries

By Mohsin Ali

LONDON, Feb. 17 (R). — President Carter's new administration is treading cautiously in its efforts to block, or change, nuclear deals between West Germany and Brazil and between France and Pakistan.

The proposed sales of nuclear re-processing plants — highly complex facilities from which nuclear weapons could be developed — are sensitive issues for the U.S.

During the presidential election campaign last year, Mr. Carter said he would try to prevent proliferation of nuclear processing plants.

But when French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt met in Paris earlier this month they did little to end their dispute with Washington over the export of sophisticated nuclear technology.

In a joint statement, they said France and West Germany would continue to provide developing states with nuclear technology for peaceful economic purposes. They agreed on the need to stop the spread of nuclear weapons, but they gave no hint of any possible reversal of their decisions to provide nuclear fuel re-processing plants to Brazil and Pakistan.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance told a press conference recently that the U.S. was "hoping to find a way to obviate the construction of the two plants" and had asked that nothing be done until alternatives could be discussed.

Vice President Walter Mondale spoke with West German and French leaders on the subject during his recent tour of West European capitals, but he declined to give details of the talks.

American and Brazilian officials met in both countries at the end of last month. The State Department said the discussions had been helpful and friendly and further meetings were planned.

The Carter administration is planning further talks with West Germany on the nuclear deal with Brazil.

Western officials are deeply worried that at least 20 nations might soon possess the technology to develop nuclear explosives.

They believe the world is at a watershed in nuclear development. Those who possess a nuclear reactor have already taken the first step towards nuclear weapon capability, they argue.

At present, only the five nuclear weapons powers — the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and China — possess plants capable of processing the plutonium needed for weapons. But other countries are considering whether to order such plants.

Current nuclear programmes will accumulate more than one million kgs. of plutonium within the next 10 years, the officials estimated. The atom bomb which the U.S. dropped on Nagasaki, Japan, in 1945 was the equivalent of not more than 10 kgs.

This is how the issue is seen by Reuters correspondents in the capitals concerned in the West Germany-Brazil and France-Pakistan deals.

Paris: France again December to halt fuel ports of re-processing, but a presidential said the $150-million sell such a plant to would still go ahead.

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

The three Jordanian dailies Thursday commented each on a different subject. While one took up the interests of the big powers in the region, another daily discussed the nuclear cooperation between Tel Aviv and Pretoria and the third commented on the importance of Mr. Cyrus Vance's visit to the region.

AL RA'I, under the heading "The constants of politics and the only truth," says that the present concern of the big powers in a peace settlement for the region, stems not from our own interests or demands, but from theirs in the area. Those who have interests here are those who are working actively to achieve a peaceful settlement, the paper says. And like they had worked or encouraged in the past the process of war, to confirm or protect their interests, they now play the opposite role for the same purpose, thus confirming that the only constant fact which does not change resides in their having interests in the region.

On these facts we should base our relations with the big powers. They should feel that they have to pay for these current interests as well as for past ones which had pushed them to create the state of Israel. They should make a choice of payment: Either to stand for their interests in the Arab World or for those "interests" represented by Israel, the paper concludes.

AL DUSTOUR, under the heading "The evil pact between Pretoria and Tel Aviv," says that the nuclear cooperation existing between the two countries is at present the subject of comments and warnings in the U.S. press, not out of fear of, or compassion for, the Arabs or the Africans, but to avoid an embarrassment similar to that

Arab media meet calls for code of ethics, onslaught against Zionism

CAIRO Feb. 17 (JNA). — The Permanent Committee on Arab Media today recommended that the next conference of Arab ministers of information be held in Tunis in August to adopt a code of ethics in the information field.

The committee decided to arrange a meeting of Arab legal information experts to prepare a draft of the code to be approved by the conference. The permanent committee ended its week-long meeting here today by passing a number of recommendations.

It called for closer cooperation with non-aligned countries by establishing links between Arab information training centres and their counterparts in the non-aligned world.

The committee further recommended that the media should concentrate on broadcasting news and television items on the struggle of the Palestinian people, produce radio and television items on the subject and produce a film about the Palestinian upheaval in the occupied territories, broadcast a unified radio programme on March 30, the Day of the Earth, and publish press material and pamphlets on the subject.

The committee called for contacts to be made with Rome and other European countries in an effort to convene a seminar on Archbishop Capucci to expose Israel's violations and its ill treatment of Arabs in the occupied territories.

It also called for the convening of seminars in various European cities, such as London, for the same purpose and, stressed the need for tightening information cooperation between Arab and African countries and for quickly holding the second seminar of Arab and African news agencies in Tripoli, Libya.

The committee further urged support for African liberation movements, and in particular for the struggle for independence of the Eritrean people.

It called for a continuation of the study on the possibility of establishing an Arab research centre to expose Zionism.

In all, the committee passed 48 recommendations, which aim to promote and support Arab information activity and make 1977 a year of information activity in Latin America to explain the Palestinian question.

The committee started its meetings here five days ago. Jordan was represented by Director General of Radio Jordan Nassouh Majall.

Technology transfer: Hidden traps for unsuspecting Third World

The transfer of modern technology to developing countries is a major plank of the proposed new international economic order. But it would be unwise to adopt technologies in a blind fashion, says a leading Kenyan economist. Modern methods can make high demands on a country's capital and energy resources. Unemployment and poverty can get worse and the environment can be polluted.

NAIROBI (Gemini) — They are omnipresent — although not omnipotent — and easily recognisable. Senior executives from multinational corporations, dressed in dark, impersonal, protocol suits, carrying lawyer's briefcases, speaking with quiet, smooth voices and followed by a retinue of assistants and secretaries. They flit from country to country "transferring technology".

Discussions begin immediately after they arrive in a developing country, usually with senior government officials or the minister of planning himself. The benefits of the "package" are discussed, an attractive loan, jobs for the unemployed, rapid industrial growth, saving of foreign exchange by import substitution, expanding exports and the "wise utilisation of idle natural resources."

Cocktail parties are hosted. A rustle of papers, a flourish of the pen, flash-bulbs pop and another agreement is signed. A triumphant photograph of the corporation executive shaking hands with the minister of planning appears in the next day's newspaper. And so another technology is transferred.

The industry is set up as planned. At the opening ceremony, the minister duly cuts the ribbon and the imported machines roar into action. Once the loo-hah is over and the foreign technicians depart, there is a serious breakdown in one of the machines. No one in the country can repair it, and no spare parts are locally available to replace what is damaged. Expensive outside help has to be flown in. Besides, the conditions in the agreement specify that all the machinery and the spare parts must be bought from one particular corporation, naturally from the country which supplies the loan.

Patents, licenses, price fixation, international quotas add to the frustrations and soon the situation so aptly described in Walter Hamilton's book "Cartels, Patents and Politics" develops and "the relationship between the patent owner and the licensee falls into a kind of feudal formula of the lord and the vassal."

Unfortunately, the foregoing fictionalised story may not end there. A report by an expert group on technology from the United States Environment Programme (UNEP) takes up the story and reviews the impact of technology on the environment and development.

Modern technology, the report points out, makes exorbitant demands on capital and energy resources. In developing countries, the locking up of scarce capital in capital-intensive automated plants may prevent employment growing as fast as the population. The result is that the unemployment situation and its offspring, poverty, become worse.

At the same time, with the days of cheap oil over, the cost of keeping the wheels of modern energy-intensive industry turning is always increasing.

Modern industries may also have destructive social effects. "Literate entrepreneurs" replace village elders and their age-old wisdom. Alien lifestyles creep in. Vast numbers of rural folk are thrown out of work because traditional occupations are undermined. They flock to the cities where modern industries are usually located. Hence, the creation and growth of slums.

All these tendencies may be part of the technology transfer package — which, in most developing countries, sustains a dual society with urban islands of obvious affluence amidst vast seas of rural poverty.

There may also be grave environmental effects. Concentrating in cities, modern industries may produce pollution levels as high as in developed countries, particularly because environmental lobbies are weaker or non-existent. Above all the poor of developing countries have poorer health, and therefore suffer much more from environmental damage.

But it would be a disaster to conclude that all modern technologies are unsuitable for the developing countries. In fact, some technologies may actually quicken development and hasten the new international economic order.

In developed nations, the report says, the prolific advances of modern technology have led to spectacular increases in affluence, but this affluence has not necessarily resulted in an environment suited to man's well-being.

With the development of modern technology, man's welfare has often been threatened by increasing levels of pollution — pollution of the air that he breathes, the water he drinks, the food he eats, the tranquillity that he needs (instead of "the decibel inferno") and the beauty of the nature that he enjoys.

The underprivileged "are left behind to observe vicariously on television how the lucky three-quarters live," says Barbara Ward, a world authority on the environment.

Large scale industries — based on mass production — depend on vast supplies of raw materials. These hungry industries feed daily on millions of tons of non-renewable natural resources. But for how long will the supply continue? Most raw materials come from the developing countries.

The industries are, therefore, vulnerable to drastic changes in international trade. Because of the vast size, they cannot easily adjust to sudden or prolonged cessation in raw materials or energy supplies.

Technological research also affects Third World economies through research into synthetic substitutes. About $1,000 million is spent annually by industrialised nations on research into plastics, synthetic rubber and fibres so that they can depend less on lute, cotton, sisal and other Third World products. This research has made a significant contribution to the drop in demand and the prices of primary products on the world markets.

Every act of technology has some impact on the environment. There is also the growing threat to the rich and poor alike from such "outer limit" risks as possible climatic changes, damage to the ozone layer, contamination of the food chain, pollution of the oceans or over-exploitation of living resources.

The gravity of the risks vary from relatively trivial ones like car accidents to potentially catastrophic ones such as all-out nuclear warfare, or the destruction of the life-sustaining contents of the biosphere such as air, water and soil.

Modern technology, relentlessly pursues the so-called economies of mass-production and automation. Only a few are required to possess a high degree of intellectual capacity or manual skills, while the barest minimum of intelligence and dexterity is expected from the vast majority of the work force.

A situation follows where machines may play a major part in the production line, alienating men from each other and from their work. "No wonder half the hospital beds in Europe and North America are occupied by mental patients," writes Erick Dammann, a Norwegian economist in his book "Future in our Hands."

Nations and groups, which control modern technology, wield power of a magnitude unparalleled in human history — power which has sometimes been used against the majority for questionable ends. There is also the brain drain from the Third World to the developed nations with the concentration of science and technology in the latter.

"Technology does — and should — have an impact on the environment, but we must consider what kinds of impact," says Philip Ndegwa, a Kenyan economist, who is Director of UNEP's Division of Economic and Social Affairs. Technologies which have positive effects on the environment include those curbing soil erosion or improving the quality of water.

He says: "Technology is man's principal instrument for achieving his economic and social aims. The achievement of the new international economic order depends on the creation of such technologies in both industrialised and developing countries. There is tremendous scope for technologically-advanced developing countries such as India, China and Brazil to pool their resources and develop appropriate technologies."

UNEP does not reject the transfer of technology from industrialised to developing countries. Mr. Ndegwa warns: "We do not in any way intend to hamper progress, but it would be unwise to adopt technologies in a blind fashion."

"The technologies that are transferred must be subject to two standards. They must be environmentally-sound and appropriate for the country concerned. The selection and development of such technologies are of paramount importance. This is what UNEP is concerned with."

Forget the past is the message coming out of Northern Ireland

Violence

DUBLIN, (CSM) — Northern Ireland's peace movement has come up with a plan it hopes will provide a way of escape for teenagers and others caught up in the province's web of terrorism and violence.

An "escape officer" will be appointed for each of the local peace groups the People for Peace is organising. (People for Peace is the name now given to the stop-the-violence movement started last summer by Mairead Corrigan and Mrs. Betty Williams.)

The mission of the escape officer will be to find a way out for those who joined one of Northern Ireland's many terrorist and paramilitary organisations. These people need to escape from a past forced on them by conditions in the province, a past they should not be blamed for, People for Peace says.

Reflecting a similar approach, two prominent churchmen in the Republic of Ireland have called for forgetting the past as a first step towards finding a solution for Northern Ireland.

The Rev. Edna McDonagh, professor of moral theology at Maynooth near Dublin, said recently that Irishmen must update their political goals and methods by at least 50 years.

The Rev. McDonagh rejected violence as either a legitimate or effective means of bringing about needed changes. Instead, he said, Ireland should adapt the nonviolent means used elsewhere today to fit the Irish situation.

Dr. Cabal Daly, Bishop of Ardagh and Clomacnois, issued an equally strong condemnation of violence in a New Year's message. Like the Rev. McDonagh, Dr. Daly praised the Northern Ireland peace movement.

He said the peace workers' mission and their place in history will have been to promote a climate in which governments and politicians can resume their task — to work out just and acceptable political solutions.

Dr. Daly charged the British government with producing a political vacuum in Northern Ireland and with alienating the public there by crude military tactics.

His charge that Northern Ireland's British rulers are guilty of a lamentable desertion from responsibility brought a sharp rebuke from the London Times.

The point stressed by Dr. Daly, the Rev. McDonagh and by the People for Peace is that political action is needed now in Northern Ireland. All that political advancement is possible, despite persistent violence, if past mistakes are left behind.

Youngsters will have a better future if their parents will forget the past.

Macau stands on Peking-Lisbon tightrope

After the Lisbon coup of 1974, Portugal wanted to give Macau back to China. But Peking did not favour that solution, so today Macau is part of China administered by Portugal. It now has an assembly, and the governor has extracted high revenue from the casinos. At the same time he is developing its tourist potential so that the tiny colony is no longer the run-down backwater it had become.

MACAU, (Gemini) — Basking on a black sand beach, playing roulette or boule in one of the five casinos, gossiping over coffee in a pavement cafe, sipping cheap Portuguese wine on the hotel balcony overlooking the harbour. Can you guess the name of this idyllic tourist spot?

The answer is China. For Macau, the 16-square-kilometre enclave of China's southern border, is officially Chinese territory under Portuguese administration.

The new status, which ended 400 years of direct rule from Lisbon, was introduced in February 1976 following a train of events initiated by the fall of the Salazar regime in Portugal. The socialist-minded soldiers who took steps to end Portugal's empire wanted to return Macau to China, but Peking was unwilling; the absorption of the territory might have eroded confidence in Hong Kong which continues to have financial importance to China. So a new relationship was worked out.

Macau's Governor, Colonel Garcia Leandru, and the 17-member Legislative Assembly walk the tightrope between Peking and Lisbon, while also trying to please the 300,000 Macanese, 98% of them Chinese.

The Assembly has been operating only since August, but has already split into three distinct groups: the conservative, pro-big business party, the Association to Defend the Interests of Macau (ADIM), headed by Assembly Chairman Carlos d'Assumpcao; the four indirectly elected and two appointed Chinese members led by multi-millionaire banker Ho Yin, who reflects official mainland Chinese attitudes (Macau has no direct diplomatic links with Peking); and the remaining two elected and three appointed Portuguese members who have no fixed policies and act as a floating vote and whose attitude is crucial to the outcome of motions tabled by the other groups.

Only 200 Chinese voted in the first Assembly election, apparently because of an instinct that they should stay out of a political system which basically concerns foreigners.

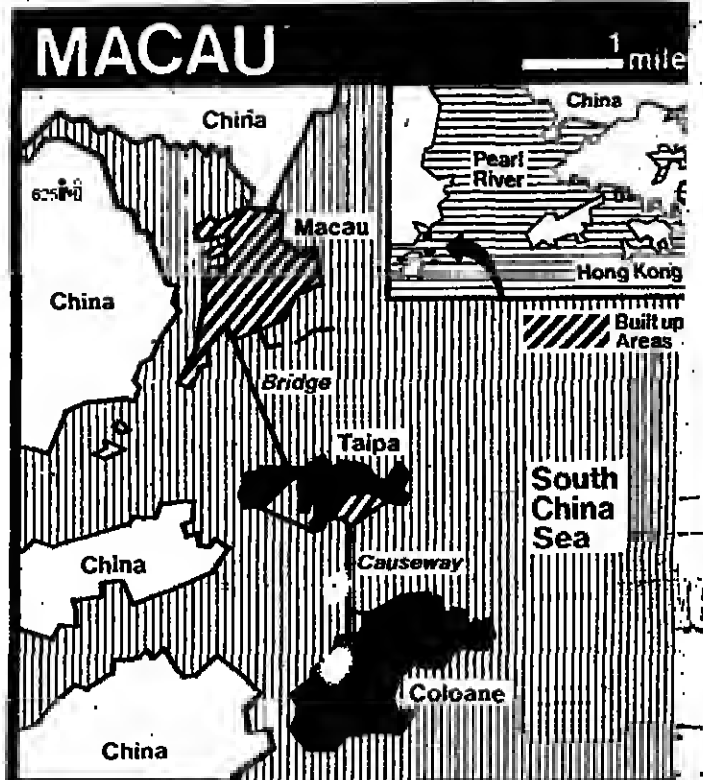

Leandru has had trouble with ADIM because of his tough line in the negotiations with the gambling syndicate which runs the casinos, Sociedade de Turismo e Diversoes de Macau, and whose annual net profits are believed to be in the region of 250 million Hongkong dollars. After five months of talks the syndicate was committed to payments in taxes, rents and investments of about 80 million Hong Kong dollars a year (against only about 9 million dollars previously).

This extra revenue will help Macau fulfil its aim of becoming economically self-sufficient, which is part of the deal struck with Portugal in formulating the new relationship.

A major effort is being put into infrastructure: a new power station on Coloane Island will begin operation this year; two dams on the island will be completed soon, which will improve the inadequate water supply; and a container terminal is being built.

Macau's commerce is controlled by pro-Peking Chinese, and its textile industry — basically a workshop for Hong Kong — by Hong Kong Chinese. Despite the virtual ending of Macau's colonial status, it is trying to develop a closer relationship with Portugal in international trade. Portugal plans to use the territory to promote its own trade with Asia, and Lisbon has promised to help Macau gain ground lost in Portugal's former African colonies.

The 36-year-old governor knows that Macau will continue to be dependent on gambling and tourism for the foreseeable future. Last year over 500,000 tourists visited the territory, all of them via Hong Kong 50 kilometres away, in addition to 2.4 million visitors from the neighbouring British colony and mainland China.

These figures are a record for Macau, and mark an end to a three-year decline in arrivals as a result of the general world economic turn-down. Most went to gamble — not only at the casinos but on greyhounds at the Candrome and on polo, one of the fastest ball games in the world.

The young governor is putting a lot of emphasis on tourism, and negotiations are underway for two major hotel projects, one each on Taipa and Coloane islands, where future developments are to be concentrated.

New legislation is being framed to control the industry and recently introduced conservation laws to protect the old Portuguese-style houses and cobble streets are being applied to preserve the charm of the territory, which capitalises on being so different from the bustle and concrete of Hong Kong.

Relations with the colony are uneasy, with Macau — once the power-house of Western influence in the East — jealous of the colony's success and irritated by its often patronising attitude. In some ways, such as the functioning of the elected Assembly, Macau is ting the pace.

Now there is talk of a rency-issuing central bank even of an airport — a development which would ease territory's dependence on H. Kong.

Late last year Leandru closed that talks on the air scheme had started a year fore and that two studies, official and one private, been commissioned to look the feasibility of the project which would be on Taipa.

However, China's approval would have to be obtained such an important undertaking and that is directly linked Hong Kong's own tent plans for a second airport cater for traffic growth. In turn is wrapped up in F. Kong's future after Brit lease on most of the colic land expires in 1997 — a suggestion is that an air should be built across the der in China to serve Hong Kong and Canton.

It looks as though, how ambitious Leandru plans the tiny territory, he will go to a pace that others date. The future is there hard to predict. But as highly-placed Portuguese official commented: "Anything's possible here." Wa could be tomorrow — but don't be misled if we're still around another 400 years."

The afternoon at the bridge club had not been a pleasant experience for one of the regulars. Somehow or other this poor soul kept cutting Trump Coup Tommy for his partner, and watched him turn what should have been a large profit into a slight loss. You may recall that Tommy plays like an utter tyro except in one circumstance: when trumps break badly. Then he becomes like Jackie Stewart behind the wheel of a racing car.

The only bright note of the day was when we had the opportunity to study Tommy at work on this hand. Obviously, Tommy was not prepared to play for some small penalty with his holding. When he rebid his club suit at the three-level, his partner felt quite justified in raising him to game.

If you look only at the North-South hands, it would seem that the game is easy—declarer need lose only two hearts. But, looking at the full deal, it seemed that Tommy and his partner were destined for another minus score. West led the ace and king of hearts. This is the reverse of the normal procedure, and showed that he held ace-king here. Then he shifted to the king of diamonds.

Tommy won in dummy and led a trump to the king. There was no mistaking the gleam in his eye when West discarded a diamond on this trick. The ace-queen of spades in dummy would provide two entries to take two trump finesses, but then there would be nothing Tommy could do with his heart loser. Yet if he ruffed a heart, he would have no way to take two club finesses.

The way out of this impasse was to play West for the jack of clubs. Since he held no clubs and only two hearts, West probably held long spades, so he was a favorite to have the jack.

Accordingly, Tommy led a spade to the ten and played the ten of clubs from dummy. East covered with the jack. Tommy won the queen, re-entered dummy with the queen of spades and finessed for East's nine of clubs. He then ran his trumps.

When Tommy led his last trump, dummy was down to the ace-eight of spades and jack of diamonds. West held the jack-nine of spades and queen of diamonds, but he had to discard in front of dummy. If he stuffed the queen of diamonds, dummy would shed a spade; if he let go a spade, dummy would part with the diamond. Either way, the table would take the last two tricks.

It's useless for U.S. to aim at military superiority since USSR can match any new American weapon

Says Soviet defence minister

MOSCOW Feb 17. (Agencies) — Soviet Defence Minister Dmitry Ustinov today urged the United States not to try to achieve military superiority, because Moscow could swiftly match any new American weapons.

Writing in the theoretical journal Kommunist, Marshal Ustinov said that militarist circles in the United States had "not yet given up hope of achieving military superiority over the USSR by creating newer and newer weapons of mass annihilation."

"Our country's economy, science and technology are now at such a high level that we are capable, within the shortest period, of matching any type of weapon that the enemies of peace create," he added.

Marshal Ustinov's article, summarised in advance of publication by Tass news agency, was seen as a counterblast to Western charges that the Soviet Union was itself seeking military superiority.

It also appeared to reflect high-level concern in Moscow that new U.S. weapons development could undermine prospects for a future strategic arms accord.

A dispute over how to classify the American Invincible Cruise missile and the Soviet "Backfire" bomber has been one of the main causes of stalemate in the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks.

The marshal's article stressed that the Soviet Union did not want to take part in a race to develop new arms.

The defence minister also denied that the Soviet Union was trying to gain superiority over the United States by building up its force levels.

"For several years neither the Soviet Union nor other Warsaw Treaty members states have increased their armed forces. Their numerical strength remains unchanged," he said.

But NATO states were building up their forces, the marshal said, which compelled the Soviet Union to maintain its military strength at a sufficient level to deter an attack.

Last night North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO), Commander-in-Chief Gen. Alexander Haig said Western defence forces should avoid letting the military balance between the two sides be broken and said the U.S. was ready to reinforce its defence efforts "if the others do the same".

Watergate's Hunt released on parole

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17 (AFP). — Mr. Howard Hunt, the former White House security consultant convicted of conspiracy in the Watergate break-in in June 1972, was released from prison on parole today, his lawyer announced.

But he immediately faces a $2-million civil action brought by four of the Watergate burglars he recruited who alleged that he did not fully explain the nature of the operation they were to carry out.

Mr. Hunt, a thriller writer and former Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) agent, was sentenced to 30 months-to-eight years imprisonment in January 1973 after pleading guilty to six counts including conspiring to break into the Democratic Party headquarters, listening to telephone conversations by Democratic officials and bugging the party's offices.

Lawyer William Snyder said the $10,000 in fines imposed on Mr. Hunt had been paid into the court today and since he had served the minimum of his sentence he could be released on parole.

The suit has been brought against him by Mr. Frank Sturgis, Mr. Bernard Barker, Mr. Eugenio Martinez and Mr. Virgilio Gonzalez, all of whom were arrested on the Watergate premises and sentenced to prison terms of at least a year each.

The only one of the original seven arrested in connection with the burglary is Mr. Gordon Liddy, a former adviser to the Republican Party's re-election committee for former President Richard Nixon.

Mr. Liddy received a sentence of six years and eight months to 20 years.

Moroccan elections probably on April 1

RABAT, Feb. 17 (AFP). — Morocco will probably hold elections on April 1 for the first parliament to meet in the last five years, informed sources said here yesterday.

The elections, part of a process towards democracy being carried out by King Hassan II, follow communal elections last November, provincial elections in January and elections of officers of professional associations due to be held at the end of this month.

The law covering the legislative election and fixing the number of seats in the new assembly is expected to be passed by the government soon. The number of members of the new chamber of representatives is expected to be increased from the old-style 240 members.

The electoral campaign is expected to last 15 days ending on March 31 and the new parliament will probably convene on April 1.

Some political sources yesterday suggested the Speaker of the new parliament will probably be Mohammed Hadou Echqguer, a young and dynamic Berber who last week resigned as minister of the interior in order to stand in the coming elections. Mr. Echqguer was, however, named the same day by King Hassan as minister of cooperation and training.

The team is headed by North Yemeni Minister of State Ahmad Abdu Saeed and South Yemeni Industry Minister Abdul Aziz Abdul Wall.

In a press statement on arrival, Mr. Abdu Saeed said the delegation was carrying messages to Kuwaiti Crown Prince Sheikh Jaber Al Ahmad Al Sabah from Presidents Ibrahim Al Hamud of North Yemen and Saleem Robaye' Ali of South Yemen.

He added that the team would discuss with the Kuwaiti Oil Minister Abdul Muteleb Al Kazimi "the possibility of continuing to help the two Yemens by providing them with oil facilities extended by the Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC)."

The Yemeni delegation will also hold talks with Kuwaiti Finance Minister Abdul Rahman Al Atiqi on cooperation between the countries, officials said.

The two ministers started a Gulf tour in Saudi Arabia two days ago to explain their countries' difficulties resulting from higher oil prices.

Gandhi and election foe Narain candidates in same constituency

NEW DELHI, Feb. 17 (AFP). — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and her bitter political foe Raj Narain today registered their nominations for next month's general election in Mrs. Gandhi's constituency of Rae Bareilly, Uttar Pradesh.

Voters returned the prime minister with a majority of more than 100,000 in the last general election in 1971.

Her son Mr. Sanjay Gandhi also filed nomination papers today at nearby Amethi, where as a ruling Congress Party candidate he will stand for parliament for the first time.

Mr. Narain, campaigning this time for the opposition Janata Party, stood against Mrs. Gandhi in 1971 and later filed a suit against her in the Allahabad High Court for alleged election irregularities.

In June 1975 the court ruled her election invalid, but soon afterwards Mrs. Gandhi declared a state of emergency and the Supreme Court later reversed the ruling against her.

Mr. Narain was detained under the emergency regulations until earlier this month.

Addressing her first election meeting in her constituency today, Mrs. Gandhi asked for cooperation in continuing the "good work carried out under the emergency" and consolidating the atmosphere of change in India.

The prime minister said much had been achieved under the emergency and India could take its place in the forefront of developing nations.

Mr. Morarji Desai, leader of the Janata Party and a former deputy prime minister, told a Jugapat, Northwest India, that the party -- formed just over a year ago -- had laid a strong foundation for an alternative to the Congress Party which has ruled India since independence in 1947.

He urged supporters to avoid violence during the campaign.

China indicates approval of U.S.-Cuban rapprochement as Carter lays down conditions

PEKING, Feb. 17 (AFP). — China today implicitly gave a nod of approval to the improved relations which seem to be in line between the United States and Cuba.

In a brief dispatch, the new China News Agency (CNA) reported the visit to Cuba from Feb. 10 to 15 of Congressman Jonathan Bingham, Chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives' International Trade and Commerce Subcommittee.

The official Chinese agency never mentions such events if Peking disapproves of them, it was pointed out in diplomatic circles here, and it was the first that the subject of relations between Washington and Havana had been brought up.

The agency quoted reports as saying Mr. Bingham had discussed with Cuban leader Fidel Castro bilateral problems concerning territorial waters, fishing rights, the American commercial blockade against Cuba, the U.S. ban on travelling to Cuba and the renewal of agreement between the U.S. and Cuba on preventing hijacking.

CNA also quoted American Secretary of State Cyrus Vance as telling newsmen recently; "I don't want to set any precedents on talks with Cuba."

CNA said the Cuban premier had declared he considered that normalisation of relations between Washington and Havana was "possible".

It was noted in Peking's diplomatic circles that better relations between the U.S. and Cuba would probably, in China's view, help up to a point to counter-balance the Soviet influence in Cuba.

U.S. President Carter said yesterday that he had received information "from indirect sources" indicating that Cuba had decided to withdraw its troops from Angola, where they have been stationed since the autumn of 1975.

The withdrawal of the 12,000 to 13,000 Cuban troops remaining in Angola would mark an important milestone in the evolution of relations between Cuba and the United States.

Unlike former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, the Democratic administration has given up the idea of the departure of the Cubans from Angola a preliminary condition for opening of a dialogue with Havana.

Mr. Carter did not identify the "indirect sources" from which he had learned the Cubans would withdraw their troops, but some observers think the message was brought to him by Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo, now on an official visit to the United States. In any case, Mr. Lopez Portillo said he was ready to act as an intermediary between Cuba and the United States.

While welcoming such a withdrawal, Mr. Carter mentioned other conditions to normalisation. He said Cuba would have to "stop exercising an aggravating influence" in the Western hemisphere. This statement seemed particularly aimed at Cuban support for Puerto Rican nationalists.

ECONOMIC AND BUSINESS NEWS

Japan's January trade figures record expected seasonal slump

TOKYO Feb. 17 (R). Japan's overall balance of payments slumped to a $850 million deficit in January but Finance Ministry officials said today the downturn had been expected because of seasonal factors.

Preliminary figures showed a visible trade deficit of $80 million compared to a record surplus in December of $-1.65 billion. The deficit on invisible earnings such as freight and tourism, increased by $74 million to $590 million.

However, the long-term capital balance improved from a December deficit of $296 million to a $20 million surplus, the first in five months, as a result of less domestic funds going abroad and increased foreign investment in Japanese securities.

Exports for January at $4.66 billion were $2.5 billion down on December but were 31 per cent up on the figure for January last year, reflecting increased sales of ships and stepped-up exports to the Middle East and Latin America.

Ministry officials said the visible trade deficit, the first since January last year, reflected the usual seasonal drop in exports following a surge in December as accounts were settled for the end of the year.

But they noted that this January's $80 million trade deficit was well down from the $354 million deficit recorded for the same time last year.

Finance Ministry sources said this partly reflected inclusion in the December figures rather than January of large quantities of crude oil and tobacco exports which in December were still on their way to Japan.

Banking sources estimated that these shipments at about $400 million, and said their inclusion in the December figures may have been to keep Japan's trade surplus for last year below the psychologically-important $10-billion mark. The 1976 surplus was $9.93 billion.

But the Finance Ministry said the timing was in accordance with International Monetary Fund rules for calculating imports.

Joint Yemeni team appeals to Kuwait for help in oil price snags

KUWAIT, Feb. 17 (R). — A joint Yemeni delegation arrived here last night from Saudi Arabia for talks on North and South Yemen's oil problems.

The team is headed by North Yemeni Minister of State Ahmad Abdu Saeed and South Yemeni Industry Minister Abdul Aziz Abdul Wall.

In a press statement on arrival, Mr. Abdu Saeed said the delegation was carrying messages to Kuwaiti Crown Prince Sheikh Jaber Al Ahmad Al Sabah from Presidents Ibrahim Al Hamud of North Yemen and Saleem Robaye' Ali of South Yemen.

He added that the team would discuss with the Kuwaiti Oil Minister Abdul Muteleb Al Kazimi "the possibility of continuing to help the two Yemens by providing them with oil facilities extended by the Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC)."

35,000 Israeli workers strike

TEL AVIV, Feb. 17 (R). — More than 35,000 Israeli workers walked off their jobs today in a new protest against inflation. Taking part in the walkout were employees of the government, local authorities and state-owned companies. They included engineers, architects, meteorologists, technicians, economists and teachers.

The strikes were called after employer and worker representatives failed to reach higher wage agreements at all-night negotiating sessions. Inflation in Israel last year was more than 36 per cent.

WALL STREET REPORT

Prices sagged over a fairly wide front Thursday on the New York stock exchange where the industrial average lost more than 4 points in moderate trading.

This decline, which followed a three-day technical rally, seemed to indicate that American investors remain very cautious about the market. The Commerce Department also announced that personal income rose at a very slow pace in the U.S. in January.

Losers outnumbered gainers at the bell by a 2 to 1 margin (923 to 475) as most groups of shares closed on a weaker tone. Paper shares, however, were generally steady, while airline, railway, aircraft and auto issues closed on a mixed tone.

At the close the industrial average shows at 943.73, a loss of 4.57 points; Transp at 225.21, a loss of 0.69; utilities at 106.82, a loss of 0.13. 19,040,000 shares changed hands, of which 3,540,000 during the last hour.

LONDON MARKET REPORT

Following a one per cent reduction in bank "base rates", there was a further sharp rise in shares Thursday on the stock exchange although profit-taking ultimately took levels off the best. Industrial leaders finally showed gains of around six pence with ICI, Beecham, Glaxo, Metal Box, Unilever and Dunlop whilst Hawker Siddeley leaped 10 pence on news of a big order from the RAF for Harrier jump jets. In the end, the F.T. index was 5.2 points higher than last night at 390.4. Textiles, shippings, banks, insurances and properties also edged ahead.

However, oils were rather irregular with British Petroleum lower and Shell improving. Gilts too looked uncertain but finally lost ground in line with sterling.

Rubbers continued higher under the lead of Guthrie but teas were dull. Golds hardened along with the bullion price. Tins were further inspired by the rising of the metal price to new peaks on the metal exchange. Diamonds and zincs also gained ground. Meanwhile in otherwise steady Japanese issues, Canon resumed its recovery.

Price of gold closed in London Thursday at 136.25.

Amin accused of assassination

Canon Carr said the report that the death was caused by a road accident was preposterous, adding: "We are alarmed and terrified by indications that the murder of the archbishop may be part of a campaign of terror unleashed against Christians in Uganda."

President Amin has accused ex-President Milton Obote, the man he overthrew in 1971, of being behind the conspiracy against him. But today a source close to Dr. Obote, who lives in exile in Tanzania, denied this. "We sent no arms to Uganda," the source said. President Amin had charged that the ploters intended to use Chinese-made arms smuggled in from Tanzania.

ECONOMIC NEWS BRIEFS

ABU DHABI, Feb. 17 (R). — The second conference of Gulf Arab health ministers ended a three-day session here today by adopting several resolutions, including the setting up of a special committee for pharmaceutical imports. The committee will meet in Iraq next month to draw up "an imports plan" for this year. The ministers agreed in principle to establish a training centre for health information and approved a scholarship plan proposed by Bahrain. A committee of specialists will consider the standardisation of curricula and will hold its first meeting in Riyadh in April.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17 (AFP). — A serious natural gas shortage in the United States seems unlikely in spite of the recent harsh weather, Mr. Richard Dunham, head of the federal energy commission, said here. The Feb. 3 emergency legislation and the milder weather now mean the worst fears are over unless there is a new cold snap in the eastern United States, he said. But the public still needed to be careful and should keep their thermostats at 18 degrees centigrade. Mr. Dunham's remarks coincided with news that the number of workers laid off due to gas supply problems had fallen from 1,500,000 to 500,000.

PARIS, Feb. 17 (AFP). — North Yemen's Foreign Minister Abdullah Al Asnaq left here for London today after a three-day official visit during which he signed an agreement on cultural and technical cooperation. Mr. Al Asnaq talked with a number of French officials including President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and the ministers of defence, foreign affairs, foreign trade, post offices and overseas territories.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17 (AFP). — China has told the United States it is ready to discuss U.S. assets held in China as well as Chinese assets frozen in the United States, an authoritative source said here. The problem dates from the 1949 Chinese revolution. The United States is claiming $196,800,000 worth of American industrial and other assets. Some $76,500,000 worth of Chinese assets are frozen in the U.S.

FRANKFURT, Feb. 17 (AFP). — West German light-water reactors will continue getting the slightly-enriched uranium they need, for a year or two, in spite of the supply suspension by the United States and Canada, the Nukem company said here today. Nukem Western Europe's chief importer of fissile material, gave no figure for its stock, but it said there was "sufficient" at its Hanau site near Frankfurt.

Euro-Communism on the rise 3 Communist parliamentarians make it to defence committee of Western European Union

BRUSSELS, Feb. 17 (AFP). — Communist members of parliament have been appointed for the first time this week to the Armaments Committee of the seven-nation Western European Union (WEU) assembly.

The nomination Tuesday of Italian deputies Salvatore Corallo and Ugo Pecchioli, and of French Senator Serge Bouchy, to the defence group is seen by many observers here as an inevitable consequence of the rise of Euro-Communism. But the Communists' presence has already provoked a strong reaction from the United States.

In a diplomatic note recently received at WEU headquarters, Washington said that if any Communist members of the committee formed part of a group scheduled to visit the United States on March 27, the tour would be shortened by half. The planned visits to military installations would be cancelled and several officials, who were to meet with the committee members, would be unavailable for interviews and briefings.

Until recently through a gentleman's agreement, Communist members were present in all committees except in the armaments group. The upward surge of the Communists in last June's Italian elections, by increasing their WEU representation, facilitated their entry into the committee from which they had hitherto been unofficially banned.

The make-up of each committee is decided by the national delegations.

Two of the three Communist members were unable to reach Brussels in time for the committee's discussion yesterday.

Only Mr. Corallo was there in time to listen to a number of reports on NATO's capacity to hit back in case of aggression, on anti-submarine warfare and communications between the Atlantic commands. The session chairman, British Conservative Mr. P. Julian Critchley, afterwards noted that the committee rapporteurs had hesitated more than usual before answering questions.

To set the tone of yesterday's meeting Mr. Critchley had set up in the conference table a miniature toy Soviet tank complete with Red Star.

LA PASIONARIA ASKS AGAIN TO RETURN TO SPAIN

MOSCOW, Feb. 17 (AFP). — Spanish Communist Party leader Dolores Ibaruri, known as "La Pasionaria" in civil war Spain, has made a new official request to return to Spain, informed sources said today. A previous request in February last year was turned down by Madrid. The sources said the latest request, made to Spanish representatives here, was not made by Mrs. Ibaruri in person. According to her secretary Irene Falcon, who has also asked to return to Spain, Mrs. Ibaruri has been in a clinic for two weeks for medical check-ups. Madrid's reply to this latest plea is expected soon. Mrs. Ibaruri, now 81, has lived quietly in the Soviet Union since 1939, after the Spanish civil war.

Giscard expects to hear of USSR's irritation at Western press' handling of subject of dissidents

PARIS, Feb. 17 (AFP). — The wave of dissidence breaking over Eastern Europe and the West's reactions to it will be discussed shortly when the Soviet Ambassador to France, Stepan Chervonenko, meets French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

Officially the Soviet diplomat requested the meeting in order to renew contacts with the French president following a two-month stay in the Soviet Union. The request is in keeping with diplomatic custom.

Since the meeting -- their first since late September -- is seen as more significant than that with Mr. Chervonenko expected to express Soviet irritation at the French press' sympathetic treatment of the many dissident campaigns in the East for the respect of human rights.

It is even possible that Soviet irritation could find its expression in postponement of a visit to France by Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev, scheduled for late June or early July, according to Mr. Giscard d'Estaing.

But two factors appear to make that eventually unlikely. For while the French press has been highly critical of repression in Eastern Europe, the French government has refrained from attacks -- unlike its Western counterparts in Washington, Vienna, the Hague and Stockholm.

In addition, Soviet leaders perhaps feel that it would be giving too much credit to the dissidents to allow them indirectly to dictate Franco-Soviet relations, which have always been a model of East-West co-operation.

The Kremlin could, of course, have other reasons for cancelling the visit -- awaiting, for example, a meeting between Mr. Brezhnev and the new U.S. president, but one thing is certain: Soviet leaders are increasingly concerned by the spread of the campaign on behalf of human rights within Communist countries and its echo in the West.

The dissidence has spread from its beginning in Moscow, with its setting up of an unofficial group to monitor the implementation of the Helsinki Agreement on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

After the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Poland, Romania and even Yugoslavia joined the tide when their governments were publicly denounced for violating human rights.

To counter the campaign, the Soviet bloc nations, including recently Yugoslavia, have stepped up attacks against "Bourgeois reaction", which they accuse of trying to sabotage the forthcoming Belgrade conference -- to assess post-Helsinki achievements -- and of being behind the growth of dissident movements.

The atmosphere is heavily charged, and the 35 countries which signed the final Helsinki document will have a hard time trying to restore a climate favourable to such a conference by mid-June.
